

Tropical Storm Michael Outlook

NWS Wilmington, NC

Time Issued: 9:10 PM Sun October 7, 2018

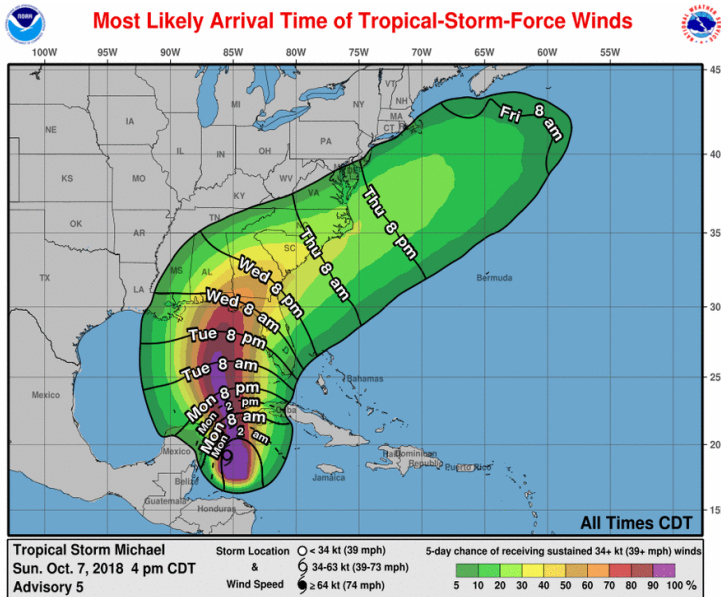

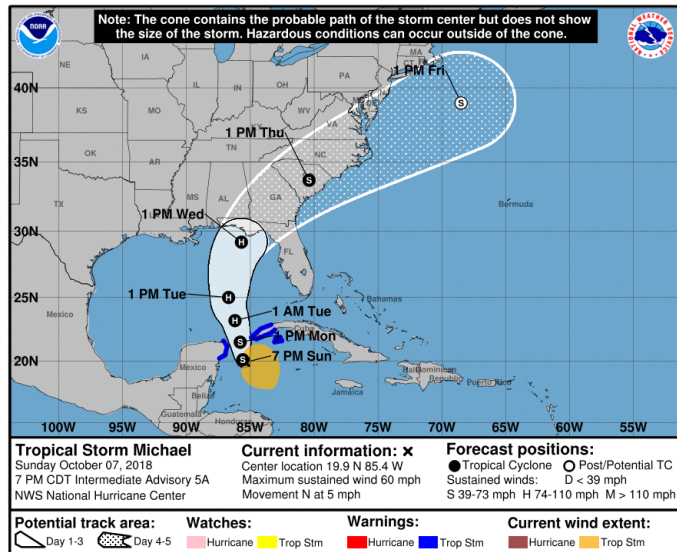

Prepared by: Reid Hawkins

...SITUATIONAL AWARENESS REGARDING TROPICAL STORM MICHAEL...

Overview: Tropical Storm Michael was located east of the Yucatan Peninsula this evening. Michael will move north into the Gulf of Mexico Monday and is expected to intensify into a hurricane on Tuesday. Michael will continue to move northward and make landfall along the coast of the southeast United States on Wednesday. As the storm reaches the Gulf Coast it will begin to northeastward towards the Carolinas.

Impacts: It is too early to determine the direct impacts as there remains considerable uncertainty of the track intensity, and timing. However, confidence that the area will see tropical storm force winds, heavy rain, and isolated tornadoes is increasing.

Timing: The storm is expected to move into our area late Wednesday into Thursday.

- ✓ All interests in the Carolinas should closely monitor the progress of Tropical Storm Michael
- ✓ Be cautious of information you see on social media. Be aware of fake weather information and use trusted sources
- ✓ Another briefing update will be available Monday.

For the latest updates, please visit our website and social media outlets: